COLLEGE SPIRITS' MAGIC MAKES OFFICER MARVEL

"What Charm," He Asks, "Can Turn
Bunch of Grandfathers Into Boys Once More?"

The dulcet strains of a famous ballad floated through the upper windows of the University Club last night, as a representative of The Star, with unwilling steps, left the building and turned south. The ballad was part of the "get-together" party of the members of the University Club, and proceeded in that direction. The Star man chanced upon an officer of the law, looming large in the night. And with him he held converse—after this wise: Said the O. O. T. L., with a sigh which would have done credit to a more poetic figure on a balmy night: "Some party, brother." And the R. O. T. S., echoing sigh and sentiment, acquiesced with "Some party."

"Some Place, Brother."

Silence for a moment. And then: "That's some place over there, brother," said the O. O. T. L. "Some magic place. Why, I was standing out here a couple of hours ago when the bunch went in. They was as dignified as a grand jury—when they went in. And now listen to them!"

OPPOSED TO THE MIXING OF POLITICS AND TARIFF

Philander C. Knox Says People Will Demand That Statesmanship
Shall Govern Revisions.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 11.—Philander C. Knox, former Secretary of State, declared in a speech at the annual banquet of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce tonight, that the "American people will insist that statesmanship and not politics will be reflected in the tariff legislation of the future."

What the People Expect.

Continuing, Mr. Knox said: "The people will insist that while from time to time duties shall be reduced, insofar as by undue protection they give swollen, unearned profits to particular interests, and insofar as they may be considered a contributing factor in the high cost of living, but they will not permit their reduction to a point where industry is destroyed and the wolves of hard times turned loose. They will not permit the tariff to be reduced enough to interfere with that progressive high standard of comfort and living, enlightened citizenship and splendid opportunity enjoyed by American labor, whose welfare, after all, is the corner stone of our national life."

Senator Harding's Address.

United States Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio in his address, said: "One cannot pretend there has been no business ill to correct, but my own observation is that those most prolific in remedies know the least about the meaning of symptoms, and less of business itself. I venture to say, after a hurried glance at state and federal efforts, that the country needs less legislation, more intelligent citizenship, more business with business and more sincerity of assault on crookedness, whether it be business, professional or political."

EXECUTIVE EDICT YIELDS MONEY-SAVER'S REWARD

John Shea, "Paper Economist," Gets
Place in Classified Service.
Another Reinstated.

After twice denying the plea of those who appreciate the services of John Shea, "paper economist," to open the door of opportunity to him by putting him in the classified service, where promotion is possible, allowing him to surmount the stone wall of a fixed salary, the President has issued an executive order making him into a clerk instead of bookbinder for the Treasury Department. John Shea is the man whose economic genius for making waste paper useful has resulted in an annual saving of from $5,000 to $8,000. The exact figures, estimating the economy effected by him in this way during the fiscal year 1915, was $5,745.50. As bookbinder his salary was $1,400 a year. He receives no increase of salary by virtue of his transfer to the classified service. However, he becomes eligible to a return of some of the money he saves to the government in the form of increased emoluments.

Expected to Save $30,000.

Some years ago there was a bookbinder in the Treasury Department which employed a foreman and six workers. John Shea was the workman of longest service. On the appropriation of those days there were provisions for $8,000 in salaries and about $600 for materials. One of the assistant secretaries of the Treasury Department proposed the abolition of the office on the theory that the government would be saved $30,000, and that the necessary work could be done elsewhere—presumably at the government printing office—at little cost. So the office was abolished.

It became evident in just three days that there was work in the Treasury Department requiring just such services as had been given by the bookbinder that could not be sent out. John Shea was sent for. He has been bookbinder of the Treasury Department ever since.

Mrs. Maud Fickling Hollis, widow of Hugh Hollis, late a clerk in the Treasury Department in first the office of the chief clerk and later in the office of the auditing architect, is also the beneficiary of an executive order permitting her re-employment in the Treasury Department. Mrs. Hollis worked for five years in the Treasury Department, resigning to be married. She is now reinstated by the order of the President.
